At Night

by Amy Lowell

The wind is singing through the trees to-night,
A deep-voiced song of rushing cadences
And crashing intervals. No
summer breeze
Is this, though hot July is at its height,
Gone is her gentler music; with delight
She listens to this booming like
the seas,
These elemental, loud
necessities
Which call to her to answer their swift might.
Above the tossing trees shines
down a star,
Quietly bright; this wild,
tumultuous joy Quickens nor dims its splendour. And my mind, O Star! is filled with your white light, from far,
So suffer me this one night to enjoy
The freedom of the onward sweeping wind.
